PROGRAM OVERVIEW

According to the CDC, more than 36.9 million people are living with HIV worldwide. Recent scientific breakthroughs as well as various prevention efforts now point to the possibility of an AIDS Free generation. The World AIDS Day 2018 conference will bring together experts in the field of HIV in order to enable physicians, nurses and other HIV care providers to develop skills to identify and effectively treat those individuals diagnosed with HIV. Experts will discuss prevention, risk reduction and treatment and the potential for getting to zero new HIV infections, and much more.

Upon completion of this program, participants will be able to:

- Describe current treatment issues in addressing HIV, HCV and Substance Use
- Identify how the Clinician Consultation Center can assist in providing competent care
- Identify key aspects of the global strategy for HIV prevention and treatment and implications for global public health
- Discuss the AETC's role in HIV prevention and treatment since 1988 and the AETC's importance for the future of the HIV epidemic
- State current research and approaches to a cure for HIV disease
- Discuss recent treatment innovations and the future of HIV care
- Identify successful and novel strategies for intervention in treating substance use
- Describe the importance of mental health treatment in HIV prevention and care
- Define the role of advocacy to increase funding and resources for intervention
- Discuss why advocacy is important to ending the HIV epidemic

INTENDED AUDIENCE

The intended audience for this program includes: physicians, physician's assistants, nurses, nurse practitioners, case managers, social workers, students of health professions, and other members of the HIV treatment team.
